The girls in a neighboring town have an anti-slavery society. A certain Miss was elected president. Asked if she would accept, she replied: "Sure, Mike, but good girls. I'm afraid before my own people will start to think I'm only about on gods. We are beginning getting the big places and I have promised to such a person before you come. I give you the high ball. I expect you to get them, etc., and when I get up for all that's ours, I think I'm going to be strong enough so the girls won't get on me while doing the president what of the slavery act, but I won't stand for any monkey double business from your girls while I am running the school. We girls ought to stand up for our country's freedom to get out and help to shoot this same monkeys. It's getting to be fierce."

The law dealing with wife desertion provides full the punishment of just deserts and still to support their families. The "land" is ambiguous. It has been found impossible to punish men who, being around their family, live on the hard-earned dollars of their wives and children. Chief has no desire to endeavor to put an end to the peace of the land" in the new. The change is necessary and easy for our soldiers and sailors who do not consider their families are often worse than the deserters. But if the law is intended merely to provide for the imprisonment of such offenders the poor families will gain little or nothing. If the former could be compelled to work for wages and their earnings were paid to the wives a real reform would be soon implemented.

The New York Board of Fire Underwriters' agents computed the cost per mile of automobile travel at 12 cents. Out here where the roads are not so good as in New York, the mileage cost perhaps reaches 25 cents. Considering their surroundings the underwriters figure on the basis of a $5000 car and charged off 20 percent when the car left the salesroom. The life of a car was put at four years, the principal cost being that of a payoff of a four-year premium. The London Board of Underwriters has put the cost of automobile travel in England at 10 cents a mile. Regarding the depreciation exactly as did the New York board. The small expense per mile in England is accounted for by the better condition of the roads there.

Many powers grow. Science has a thousand forms. Sometimes it is powers that stand at our door and others wait outside. More often it is not money to spend, but something more precious, friendship, sympathy. Sure as love grows, so does it. A mother's heart is breaking. Almond would be useless - would be a mockery. But we can hold to the thoughts of a man of the world, who will honor the suffering. Or it is the anguish of a life struggle, a life man Gethsemane, beside which we are called to watch. We can give no actual aid—the soul must fight its battles alone; but we can be as the angel that ministered to our Lord's Gethsemane and imparting strength and helping the weary strugger to win the victory.

PUBLICITY TO BE USED

"Publicity" is the pass word in Santa Fe now as a result of the action of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce who have organized a publicity bureau for the most ancient and most wonderful city in the United States.

Bid Bragan, associate editor of the Santa Fe New Mexican, has been given charge of the department under Secretary Harris and his work will start at once. Mr. Bragan will remain in his present position with the New Mexican and will divide his time between his home in this office and as busy a desk in the Chamber of Commerce in San and Palace of the Governors.

The ancient and historic City of Santa Fe is to be given the most extensive coverage from the tourist standpoint ever undertaken and the work will be pushed vigorously by the Chamber of Commerce. Every scenic attraction of the mountains in the old days, every relic of Santa Fe's wonderful tourist attractions are to be placed before the people of the United States.

A number of the best known magazine writers and newspaper writers in the United States have had the witness of this great State of New Mexico and especially of Santa Fe. Indeed he has been found impossible to publish men who, being around their family, live on the hard-earned dollars of their wives and children. Chief has no desire to endeavor to put an end to the peace of the land" in the new.

He is strong by the mosquito of an insect by day and his frame is growing by the feelings of affliction by night.

What is the writer but the blind worm of rats? Seeing that his eyes are now covered in shades of pain and his years of suffering.

Behind he is pressed upon the ground, his head is swallowed up by the depths of the Fatherless ocean of time that is considered no more.

In his infancy he cannot even walk because of pain and in his old age he cannot walk unmotivated and an empty shell.

He has a heavy cross and woman he has no child, his only son is his neighbor but the other son is hidden with his friends and relatives in wreaths.

How pitiful how that man never bathes, washes, and grooms under.

What is he but a burden on the men of assistance? And, not a single man in the land of rats.

He played at the trees and strangers who came to the brown mere because he was seen to trip. The soft golden glow held green warmth to each.

Behind he is pressed for office and the dead-beat credits him over and again on their system against him.

He exclaims himself among the people and swarms with odds, but when the odds are counted he finds he is not in it.

He boasts of his strength in Texas, but is beaten by a bold-headed man from Texas cities.

He goes to the postoffice to get exchange and demands a due from the doctor for his last visit to the dentist.

He goes forth to bring the fresh air and to meditate on the treachery of earthly things, then is accosted by a bank cashier with a sight draft for $5000.

A police officer hath to wait for him at the market place and walks round him drooling like unto a cock.

He trusts to a man who admires to be filled with righteousness and grand in high on the synagogue and gets all done up.

For, behold, his pains crowd in full of gall and smite over with the serpent.

From the saddle to the grave he gives his arms to him that smites him.

His seed multiplieth around him and breath too broad and if his son cometh to honor he knows it not.

Patricide even against him. What is he but a painful woe in the soul of time?

Now, he is a wort.

THE EDITOR

The editor is of few days ago ill of microbes.

He cometh forth like a flower, but is soon withered by the winds of adversity and scorched by the flames of perplexity.

Sorrow and creditors follow him all the days of his life.

He hopeth from his bed in the morning and his foot is pierced by the rock of disappointment.

He ploddest toils to his study and his heart is pained by the malignant nettle of exhaustion.

He setteth himself down to rest at noon, and is tormented in his memory by the pin of digestion.

He walketh through the streets of the city in the pride and glory of his mind, and some angry delinquent subscriber unjoined his neck.

He smaketh the cigar of contentment but it exploded with a loud noise, nor was kindled.

Behind, he glideth down the minister's aisle and under it strews with dead beats.

He is strong by the mosquito of an insect by day and his frame is growing by the feelings of affliction by night.

WITNESS SNED CASE

FACES PERJURY CHARGE

El Worth, Texas, Nov. 20.—While attorneys were arguing the case of John Head Sned, charged with the murder of Capt. A. G. Boyce, today a grand jury returned a perjury indictment against J. A. Weaver, a state witness in the trial. Defense arguments were completed today, and the state will argue today.

Weaver, testifying he was in the hotel lobby when Captain Boyce was killed by Sned. He said that just as Sned entered someone applied an opiate and the shooting began immediately.

Other witnesses testified that according to Weaver's story of his movements just prior to the time when he went to the hotel would indicate he was on a train coming into El Worth when Boyce was killed. Weaver was released on bail.

Captain Boyce was killed by Sned because of the part Sned claims he had in the slaying of Captain Boyce's son with Mrs. Sned. The son, A. L. Boyce, was later killed and Sned charged also with that crime.
